REPORTER JOSEPH GIVENS:

General Ann Dunwoody and Vice Admiral Kevin McCoy signed a formal Memorandum of Understanding between the U.S. Army Materiel Command and the U.S. Navy’s Naval Sea Systems Command to work together to hire wounded warriors and veterans.

GENERAL ANN DUNWOODY

Whether it’s resetting a tank or designing a nuclear powered submarine both of our commands offer outstanding career opportunities across the nation.

REPORTER JOSEPH GIVENS:

This historic signing will form a commitment between the two organizations. Army Soldiers will now have access to NAVSEA positions and Sailors will now have access to AMC positions, greatly expanding their job opportunities.

VICE ADMIRAL KEVIN M. MCCOY

In this business of hiring wounded warriors and bringing them back onto the team, there is lots of activities but there’s only one metric that counts and that’s how many of our warriors actually have careers.

REPORTER JOSEPH GIVENS:

By providing jobs for these veterans, AMC can clearly benefit by tapping into the valuable experience and commitment that our men and women in uniform embody.
